(Image credit: Shutterstock) Android 12 introduces the new Material You design language, which builds upon the older Material Design paradigm. With Material You, Google is adding some flair and personality to stock Android. For instance, Material You's theme engine picks a color from your wallpaper and applies it system-wide as your accent color. But what if you don't like it? Changing it is easy. Google gives you some alternate options to try that would also look good with your wallpaper, or you can select from a few basic colors instead. The options remain limited based on your wallpaper, so if you're still not happy with the colors, you might need a new wallpaper entirely. But assuming that's not the case, here's how to change the Material You accent color in Android 12.1. Open Settings > Wallpaper & style. (Image credit: Tom's Guide)2. If you don't like the wallpaper color options, tap the Basic colors tab. This will present you with four alternate color options. (Image credit: Tom's Guide)3. Select the color you'd like to test. The preview windows at the top of the screen will show what the color will look like.4. To go back to the original wallpaper color, tap the Wallpaper colors tab and then select the color bubble you'd like to use or try. (Image credit: Tom's Guide)More Android tipsAndroid is a powerful operating system with many features, but we can help guide you through some of the things you might not know how to do. For instance, we've also got guides on how to take a screenshot on Android and how to take a scrolling screenshot in Android 12, plus how to change keyboard on Android. On the apps front, we can show you how to delete apps on Android, and how to update Android apps, while how to clear Android cache could also be useful. Slightly more niche options include how to record a call on Android and how to scan a QR code on Android, while how to backup and restore text messages on Android should be of use to everyone. Today's best Google Pixel 4a deals (opens in new tab) Android 12 introduced a theming engine called "Material You." By simply switching wallpapers, you can completely change the colors of the Android UI. It's super easy to do and has a dramatic effect. We'll show you. How does it work? Well, it's pretty simple. Android analyzes your wallpaper and chooses a few accent colors to use throughout the operating system. That includes the Quick Settings, icons, volume controls, lock screen, and much more. The theme works with light and dark modes. RELATED: How to Turn on Dark Mode on Android So if you have a favorite wallpaper and you're running Android 12 or newer, that's literally all there is to it. Here are a few examples of how the wallpaper changes the colors. Now that you've seen what it can do, let's change the wallpaper to get a new theme! First, tap and hold on the home screen. Select "Wallpapers & Style" or the equivalent for the launcher that you're using. Choose the wallpaper that you want and apply it to the home screen. And now you have a brand new theme! It really is that simple. Every wallpaper essentially comes with its own theme as long as you're running Android 12. Keep in mind that this process might look different on some devices and that some companies might not support it at all. RELATED: Android's "Material You" Theming Is Great, but Don't Expect Samsung to Use It Setting the background color of a web page or an element on the page can enable you to create unique layouts. Take the homepage of Delish as an example. The background image of its header section is a colorful soup. To ensure readers can still see the name of the recipe, the background color of the text box is set to white. The effect is striking and easy to read. In the past, you could use the background color attribute to change the background color of a page or element. Say you wanted to change the background color of a web page to maroon. You would have simply added the bgcolor attribute in the opening body tag and set it to the hex color code #800000, as shown below.
